My Memory of Us is a story about a boy and a girl who were taken and thrown into the Ghettos of Warsaw. The girl has escaped but the boy has not. Two years of hard labor in the Ghettos led to people's starvation, brutal ghettokicks, disease, and the boys eventual death. The place was one of the hardest ever to survive in, because many of the people were hit by hunger and illness. When the wall was finally taken down, 70% of the total prisoner population died. You play as Vohirl, a young man who has grown up in the Ghettos. His father has been arrested and taken to The Bunker, a mass-grave for the living. His father died before Vohirl had the chance to hear him explain what happened during the deportation, as all survivors of that time are called in the game. The only thing that Vohirl remembers is a strange girl who saved him from a violent uprising and helped him escape from Ghettos when she was 11 years old. Now, Vohirl dreams of the day he will reach 18, when he will get out of The Bunker. It is the year 1944. The red-faced robot soldiers that rule the Ghettos are hunting Vohirl, as the word has reached them that he could be the key to change the course of history, for he is able to recreate the lost memories of the people who built the Ghettos and thus create a city of the past instead of the present cruel reality. , 4 part series Part 1: Overhyped or interesting? Developing a VR experience is easy. Designing a virtual world based on real world considerations, usage, and logistics is very difficult. So, just like real life, when you have a good idea of what you can build, it's easy to look at past successes and imagine the same thing in your new VR world. You'll get a firm grasp on what you already have built, and start thinking about what else you could build. Which is great, because part 2: The Crowd, part 3: Marketing, and part 4: Commercialization are fairly easy. The questions you would need to answer prior to getting into the actual design are: Are there "I'll guess?" uses that can be used to evaluate potential implementations? What's the ideal level of immersion that could be matched, and what are the associated technology requirements? How big of a footprint does it take to support that? How much is the average user going to cough up, and can I keep the price low enough to support mass adoption? What will the minimum recommended experience give an individual who has a decent VR system? In the last article, We explored an idea for a northern location here in the US. To identify an actual use case for the experience, we used No Man's Land on the website Virtual Worlds that Explore Space and created an initial art review of the site, shown below: Note how nearly every one of the lands have some form of post-apocalyptic, far future or something relating to space or some other system that was not-explained, and yet we had plenty of stories for the site. In none of the lands are cities, civilizations, cities, etc. shown. There are, in other words, none of the "weak class" of worlds. These worlds represent the "ideal" and not the "realistic". We also, however, had found the near-worse case of the last article. All we needed to do was multiply the previous assertion of some of the lands/sites having little in the way of explanation. Because, naturally, that is enough to generate use cases. An obvious candidate, and in fact the No Man's Land land, was a post-apocalyptic land. Because that is such an

When I first saw THE 40-YEAR-OLD VIRGIN by the Bonfigliolis, I thought to myself, "This will never work. It's too joyful!" But I was given the chance to see the film yesterday at Landmark Cinemas, and I still love it. It's one of those movies I watch over and over again, I love it. It's a story about aging, about bad habits, about love and relationships, about the freedom at living life. It's a charming, sweet, tender, warm film that deserves to be seen by everyone, by everyone. It will make you laugh and cry. Buy it now! September 2011 Western attitude was depicted in movies from early days of cinema. Old cowboy movies were depicting lots of allegories, such as the "Wild Bunch" (1969). The 1959 "Broken Arrow" was a masterpiece in 1979 "Leaving Las Vegas" (1996). The situation in which young dudes faced a crisis and have to make a choice was presented in the film "3:10 to Yuma" (2007) and in many other films. "Sheriff's Deputy" (2001) took this legend and told the story of two family men – a sheriff and his deputy. The sheriff is a family man too. He can not make love to his wife that was the reason why he was assigned the additional duty. At the same time his deputy needs help - his wife wants to divorce him because he is constantly at work. "A Stranger" (2010) is the story of a man in a remote corner of Alaska who joins a treetop scout club and forms a friendship with a teenager who has a red flag in the eye and is missing part of a thumb. When the recruit tells the teenager about his wife's new job at a space camp, the adolescent falls in love with the news and sets his eyes on the incredible trek to find her. To be nominated, "A Stranger" had to become the best foreign film. Director Danfung Dennis's "The Lure" (about the ocean) and "The Sinner" (about the eyes) were good
