]]> for iPhone 03 Jun 2012
18:00:52 +0000 is an ad-supported app that allows you to share your own videos to

---

Twitter or any other social service without sending any sort of object to anyone, including your contact list. It is so easy to do that in just a few seconds and just moments later, those videos are publicly available on the web. Vumi works similar to WhatsApp or Skype or, at least, that is what I assume. It is an app that operates very simply. Firstly, you have to choose whether to use Twitter, Skype, Facebook or Vimeo as your sharing service. With each of them, you can connect your account and share a video file that you have saved on your device or you can send a link to the video you want to share. With the last option, you need to add a video file if you wish to upload one. There is also a button to take a new photo and add it to the video. In both cases, when done, you need to press Save. Vumi then goes through the process of uploading the file or photo on the selected sharing service. At that point, the video or photo is uploaded and your contact list is informed of its availability, either on Twitter,

---

Skype or Facebook. Each contact can either share or retweet the video or the photo. As I have already mentioned, Vumi is an app for sharing videos and photos which is great for mobile video consumption. I am sure that this app will make its way to Android or other mobile operating systems in the future.
